Metrowater uses hosepipes to supply water to houses in narrow streets

To supply water to houses in narrow streets and alleys where the water tankers cannot enter, Metrowater is using hosepipes up to 200 feet in length. The specially designed pipes are connected to the water outlet of the tankers at one end and then laid along the narrow alleys where they are connected to T-shaped pipes set up at regular intervals for the residents to draw water directly.

"This is to ensure women don't have to walk long distances with pots. In most lanes, the residents coordinate the water supply. Now, since residents get water right in front of their houses, neither is there any hassle nor any middlemen earning commission," said an official.

The first such experiment was successfully implemented in Subbarayan Street in Royapuram. It will be followed in West Mambalam. T. Nagar. Anna Nagar, Saidapet, Triplicane and all other areas where there are narrow streets. He said that work has already started in some slum areas in Anna Nagar.

The network of T-shaped pipes costs about Rs.25,000 per street and the hosepipes cost extra. A Metrowater engineer said that in some areas where old pipelines exist, they will set up T-shaped pipes and pump water into small existing water sumps. From the sumps, water can be pumped to each household.

530 kg. of artificially ripened mangoes were seized from a fruit vendor on 11th Avenue, Ashok Nagar and 4000 kg. from 20 vendors in Koyambedu.

According to the officials, ethylene is used to ripen fruits such as mangoes inside chambers, but at controlled levels.

The drama troupe 'The Madras Players' will present an English play based on the adaptation of the popular Tamil short stories written by R. Chudamani at 6.30 p.m on Sunday, May 19 in Vani Mahal (G. N. Chetty Road, T. Nagar).

The play was originally translated by Prabha Sridevan, adapted by Nikhila Kesavan and directed by P. C. Ramakrishnan.

A constant through the 90 minutes, this character will play the part of the narrator in one act, a listener in another and an actor in the next.
