Man promising government aid dupes woman of jewellery

A 50-year-old woman was duped of 10 sovereigns of gold jewellery worth Rs. 2.2 lakhs in CIT Nagar on Monday by a man who promised to help her to get government aid.

Police said Chandra of Kolathur went to visit a relative and was returning home.

She was waiting at CIT Nagar bus stop when a man approached her and said that he was a government agent and was looking for poor, elderly women to whom the Union government was providing monetary assistance.

He took her to a bank in the area and asked her to wait while he went inside. He returned and told her she wouldn't get the aid money if she was wearing gold jewellery.

Believing him, Chandra handed over her jewellery to him who went back into the bank but did not return for a long time.

Suspecting she had been duped, she went inside and found the man was nowhere in sight. A case filed in KK Nagar Police Station is under investigation.

Five held for looting massage parlour

By Our Staff Reporter

Five persons, including two college students, were arrested on November 13 for looting Rs. 23,000 and six mobile phones from a massage parlour in KK Nagar at knifepoint.

Police said Rajesh (35), Vivek (24), Vinoth Kumar (22), Gopi (23) and Arun Kumar (27) went to the massage parlour on Monday, threatened its owner Jawahar Basha and his employees at knifepoint and took away the cash and phones. On interrogation, Rajesh (the leader of the gang) said that the team had earlier looted massage parlours in Vadapalani, Arumbakkam and Anna Nagar.

Some of them did not lodge any police complaint as they were pursuing nefarious activities in their premises.

TAMIL CINEMA 75 - A LOOK BACK

By RANDOR GUY

TAMIL CINEMA AND MUSIC - 73

THE MULTIFACETED GENIUS S. BALACHANDAR

One of the stormy petrels of the South Indian art world, a brilliant person with his share of delightful eccentricities, he was an actor, screenwriter, film producer, music composer, innovative celluloid creator and above all an acknowledged genius of classical Carnatic music. During a certain period of his life, he was active in Tamil Cinema, playing roles of different kinds and also making movies, many of which attracted wide attention. Much influenced by Hollywood cinema, the films he directed had a touch of the west in the story content and music. Even though he was a conservative classical Carnatic musician, he invested his film music with different schools of Western music like jazz and Latin American melodies and rhythms and such. That was a period when such genres of music were a novelty in Tamil cinema. Such a multifaceted personality was S. Balachander (1927 - 1990).

Of the many films in which he was associated with as actor or director, mention should be made of 'Rishya Shringar' (1941), 'Ithu Nijama?' (1948), 'Kaithi' (1951, also directed by him), 'Rajambal' (1951), 'Anthanaal' (1954, story and direction), 'Avana Ivan?' (1962), 'Bomma' (1964), and 'Nadu Iravil' (1970). Of all these films, 'Anthanaal' came to be hailed as a classic of South Indian cinema, being the first movie to be produced in the part of the country without the usual and obligatory routine song-and-dance sequences.

Sundaram Balachander was the son of the Mylapore lawyer V. Sundaram Iyer, and, as a young boy, he went along with his father, handsome brother Rajam and sister Jayalakshmi to Kolhapur from Madras to act in the Prabhat Pictures' Tamil film 'Seetha Kalyanam' (1933). Even as a mere lad, 'Chandru', as he was called by his family and friends, revealed his genius and interest in music.

While his brother and sisters learned music under the legendary musician and composer Papanasam Sivan, the lad hung around in the family house in Mylapore, absorbing the music by mental osmosis. He also revealed a flair to play on musical instruments, which would help him in large measure later when he became a film music composer.

Impressed immensely by his genius, the producers cast him in 'Seetha Kalyanam' as a musician in the court of the mighty King Ravana to play the percussion instrument 'kanjeera'. He astonished everybody present on the set with his amazing proficiency in playing the instrument which is held by the left-hand and rhythms played with the right-hand! During the shooting of the scenes he proved more than a problem to the director Baburao Prebendary. While playing on the kanjeera he would be lost in his own world and would wander all over the set and in and out of the film frame, and sometimes marching and swaying, making faces, right up to the camera! Exasperated to the brim, the director drew a circle with a chalk and ordered the boy not to move out of it warning him that, if he did, he would not get any food and other goodies like chunks of creamy ice cream!

During the making of the movie at Kolhapur, Chandru did not have many scenes but he did not waste the spare hours. He evinced great interest in the many musical instruments used in the orchestra and worked hard to learn them. Thus, he learnt to play with ease and efficiency the sitar. Later Rajam and Chandru toured many parts of northern India with Rajam giving vocal concerts and Chandru accompanying him on the sitar. While performing at Karachi (then part of India and now in Pakistan) the audience was so impressed with the young lad's mastery over the sitar that the patrons who organised the concert presented him a silver sitar.
